Hello beautiful Svitlanka!

I am also pleased with your letter. My current work is manual. I work at Česká Pošta, because I had burnout in programming in 2017. I was searching my mission and I started write my story in this page.

I am a Christian, but I rarely visit a church. I'm just trying to apply certain principles to a normal life.

In 2017, I started developing a web technology and an economic system that could become the future hope of humanity.

I wrote some details about that in this document:

This is the only policy activity I have. I have never been interested in politics or economics. I take it as my mission but I don't like it much. I'm up to it myself and sometimes it feels like I want to break my head against the wall. My ideas about changes in the world are so significant that I am unable to find anyone who can help me with that and that is tired.

I have been employed for about 9 years as a programmer and now it is the ninth and last month of my post work. In May I come back to programming. I'm looking forward to it. My new company will be Asseco Central Europe.

I live in České Budějovice in the Czech Republic. The city has about 94 thousand inhabitants and was founded in 1265 by king Přemysl Otakar II. In the photo above you can see the square with the fountain where the statue of Samson is. Samson was a pious man endowed with a great power by God. No warrior could stop him, but the enemy outsmarted him by sending a woman against him. Maybe I have something to do with Samson in this. I've also come across a few women who have made my life quite difficult, but that is past. I also looked at the city of Kherson. It's a port city with an industrial and cultural center, isn't it?

Svitlanka, you look like a woman with a good heart. You said there were changes in your country. Are you planning to leave Ukraine for the future and go somewhere else?
